

Art Weekly Art

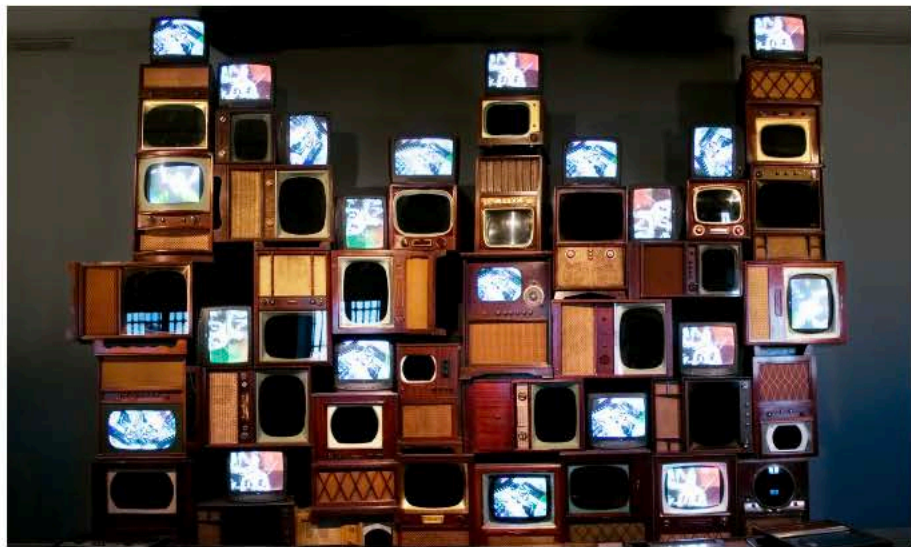

Jonathan Jones

Fri 23 Sep 2022 14:23 BST

A wave of Korean art, the sound of Turner and Freud goes to the races - the week in art

Mirage Stage by Nam June Paik at Hallyu! The Korean Wave at the Victoria and Albert Museum, London. Photograph: © Nam June Paik Estate

The V&A's new show is a dazzling historical remix, Tate Liverpool sets an English master to music, while Lucian Freud's love for the turf is revealed - all in your weekly dispatch

Exhibition of the week Hallyu! The Korean Wave

Infectiously bold survey of South Korea's pop culture that also manages to squeeze in some solid history. Read our five-star review.

● V&A, London, from 24 September

Also showing William Kentridge

Survey of the superb and restless South African artist, theatre and opera creator, and radical. Read our review.

● Royal Academy, London, 24 September-11 December

Marina Abramović: Gates and Portals

An Abramović event without the renowned performance artist, who is replaced by volunteers trained in her "Method."

● Modern Art Oxford, 24 September-5 March

Dark Waters: JMW Turner with Lamin Fonfana

Does the great and radical Romantic painter need a soundtrack? Tate Liverpool reckons so.

● Tate Liverpool, from 27 September

Horses and Freud

A celebration of Lucian Freud's passion for the turf, including relics of his gambling.

● Ordovas, London, 27 September-16 December

Image of the week

Photograph: Francis Bacon

Francis Bacon, known for his brutally visceral paintings of screaming popes and writhing figures, also worked in London as an interior designer. Rare surviving objects from the time - including his rugs, lesser-spotted paintings and this plate/palette - are now up for auction. Read the full article.

Most viewed

Live Kwarteng to set out medium-term fiscal plan on 23 November - business live

Pound's plummet underlines schoolboy error by Kwasi Kwarteng

Live Russia-Ukraine war: Russian conscripts being sent straight to front. Kyiv says: UK sanctions Russians linked to 'sham referendums' - live

Russia: man shoots officer drafting residents for war in Ukraine

Live Rachel Reeves says Labour would use revenue from reinstating 45% tax rate to hire more NHS staff - UK politics live